$12.6M over three vears. Extension follows Robin Lehner deal — so who will be team's No. 1 goalie?

The Ottawa Senators believe they'll have one of the best goaltending tandems in the NHL rather than a goaltending controversy.

The Senators signed Craig Anderson to a three-year contract extension on Monday worth US$12.6 million, just weeks after signing Robin Lehner to a three-year deal.

"I think it's a great thing for the Ottawa Senators having two guys that we feel can be No. 1, two guys that can go in the net at any point in time and win games," said Senators assistant GM Pierre Dorion. "I think they work well with each other, they're going to push each other and I think it's only a good thing for our team and our fans."

The 33-year-old Anderson has one year remaining on the four-year deal he signed with Ottawa prior to the 2011-12 season. He'll make $4.75 million in 2015-16 and 2016-17 and then drop to $3.1 million in 2017-18.

He was relieved to have the contract completed before the start of the season.

"Taking the contract part out of the equation allows me to focus completely, 100 per cent, on my job of stopping the puck and there's no distraction whatsoever from that part of the game," Anderson said. "That's exciting for me and a good feeling that I'm going to be part of the Senators' organization for the next few years."

With both Lehner and Anderson both under contract, the big question will be: Who is No. 1? The 23-year-old Lehner was considered Ottawa's goaltender of the future, though Anderson's new deal raises the question of when that future will come.

Dorion said GM Bryan Murray instructed him to tell reporters that whoever wins games will play.

Anderson anticipates Lehner will push him for playing time and said that's a benefit for any goalie.

"I'm looking forward to working with him and helping him improve," Anderson said. 'By him being a better goalie he's going to help me become a better goalie and we're going to be a better team because of it." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Mould forces arena's closure at $10M facility in Chelsea

Meredith Centre.

TREVOR GREENWAY & LUCY SCHOLEY

The arena portion of a $10-million community centre in Chelsea, Que., has been closed down indefinitely while air quality crews deal with growing mould issues inside the building.

Recent air tests in the Meredith Centre hockey arena confirm that spore counts are above acceptable limits, and the municipality decided to close the building down immediately to avoid any health issues with hockey players and figure skaters using the ice.

"As a preventative measure, they decided to close the arena, because they didn't want anyone to get ill," said Meredith Centre's director-general Sharon Ryan on Monday. "(The reports) also state that there is only difficulty when there is prolonged breathing and people wouldn't be in (the arena) for long periods of time."

Although the report sug-

Although the report suggests that exposure levels could cause health issues for those who spend extensive time in the building, officials aren't concerned about employees and say most spend their days in offices away from the arena — or the Zamboni driver, who only spends 15-minute stints cleaning the ice.

"For the limited exposure that people had, there's no cause for concern or health risk or anything like that," said Peter Sudermann, president of the Chelsea Foundation board, which runs the programming in the Meredith Centre.

He said there has been mould growing in the arena since the north wall collapsed under snow in February 2013. Because workers erected a temporary plywood wall, it has been difficult to control the humidity, he said, so mould has formed on the wall and the ceiling of the arena.

"There have been tests and monitoring of this all along," he said. "The centre has been safe."

They were already planning to erect a permanent wall in late September or early October, but are hoping to expedite the construction process.

It's bad timing for the closure, as Des Collines Minor Hockey selection camps were set to begin last week. All ice times have been moved to different arenas.

The community centre portion of the Meredith Centre remains open, as do summer camps and classes.

"Ît's a completely separate ventilation system. It is completely two HVAC systems, they are totally separate," Ryan said, adding that air tests for the community centre came back "fine."

Chelsea did not share the results with Metro by press time.

'One final act of kindness'. Family remembers Michael Lumahang

Rene Tremblay had always looked up to his older stepbrother, Michael, as a protector, but now that he died saving a 12-year-old boy in the Ottawa River, he also considers him a hero.

Michael Lumahang, 39, went missing Saturday after jumping into the Ottawa River near Bate Island to rescue a friend's son. They were at the popular picnic spot near the Champlain Bridge that afternoon with family and friends.

Just before 6:30 a.m.

Just before 6:30 a.m. Sunday, the Ottawa police Marine, Dive, and Trail Unit recovered Lumahang's body near the shore.

It wasn't unusual for him to help others without being asked because that was the kind of guy Michael was, said Tremblay when reached by phone Monday morning.

"One final act of kindness," said Tremblay, 31.

"Whatever you needed, he was there. You didn't even have to ask for his help. He would just be willing to go the extra mile."

Lumahang leaves behind his wife, Eva, and Tremblay's sister, Emily, and brother Jeremy. He came to Canada from the Philippines and worked in Ottawa as an office cleaner.

Tremblay cherishes the time when his stepbrother stepped in to be his sponsor at his church confirmation when the original sponsor couldn't make it. Relatives and members of the Filipino community visited Tremblay's parents' home to pay their respects on Sunday.

His family has set up a Facebook page for loved ones to share stories and photos of his stepbrother. Tremblay said his stepbrother did not have life insurance and relatives will update the page over the coming days with information on how to make donations to help cover funeral costs.

City ponders ways to mark a year since bus fatalities

Remembering Sept. 18, 2013. The 76 bus collided with a VIA Rail train near the Fallowfield station that morning, killing six

JOE LOFARO joe.lofaro@metronew

The city is keeping commemorations of the one-year anniversary of the fatal OC Transpo collision informal instead of having a public memorial or ceremony in honour of the victims.

Over the past several months, Barrhaven Coun. Jan Harder and Mayor Jim Watson have been reaching out to the victims' families to seek their input on appropriate ways to remember their loved ones who died Sept. 18, 2013.

The 76 bus collided with a VIA Rail train near the Fallowfield station that morning, killing bus driver David Woodard, and passengers Michael Bleakney, Connor Boyd, Kyle Nash, Karen Krzyzewski and Rob More.

Harder said in an interview Monday she is in the early stages of leading a project to develop a permanent plaque or monument with input from all six families, although it likely wouldn't be ready until possibly next spring.

On Sept. 17, councillors will observe a moment of silence at a transit commission meeting at city hall and on Sept. 18, flags at city facilities will fly at half-mast.

"This is a very deeply personal tragedy. The people who are on the bus, the people who lost loved ones ... are Barrhaven residents," said Harder. "So, they don't want more than that. It's not about us in any way; it's about those people and what their wishes are."

Some families could not agree on a few ideas that were floated around for the anniversary, according to a July 10 memo the mayor sent his city hall colleagues.

"I am sure that it was not easy for the families to consider these matters and I have told them how much I appreciate their input," wrote Watson.

One thing they all agreed upon was the termination of route 76, which will make its last trip on Friday. Harder said it was a "common request" in her discussions with the victims' families as well as passengers who survived the crash

"I don't like to see the number," she said. "Without a question is it something that would just make the families sad."

Affordable housing building opens doors in Lowertown

CEO of a community housing

Ottawa Community Housing gave an old, rundown duplex at 456 Old St. Patrick St. a $2.5-million makeover with new windows, radiant flooring and LED and fluorescent lighting. Most of the centre's units, which opened on Monday, can house families.

There are four two-bedroom and five three-bedroom units. One other four-bedroom apartment is wheelchair-accessible.

But this housing project cuts only a sliver into the city's 9,000-person waiting list.

'We've gone from, basically, two families to 10 families, but we know that there's a lot more work left to be done," said Ottawa Mayor Jim Watson.

Ottawa Community Housing Corporation CEO Stephane Giguere said it's a "step towards" improving the waiting

Grannies to GoGos. Quebec grandmas inspire nation with letters to South African women

A small group of Wakefield, Que., grandmothers sparked a national movement when they started writing letters to South African women 10 years ago.

The women of Wakefield Grannies were matched with a grandmother pen pal in the Township of Alexandra. Many of these GoGos, as the grandmothers are called, had been left to care for their AIDSorphaned grandchildren, so the grannies wrote them letters of support, raised money and mailed supplies.

"When these women realized that their daughters were dying because of AIDS, they didn't understand it at all," said Wakefield Grannies pioneer Norma Geggie. "There was some stigma attached to it. They would almost try to hide them away. They thought that perhaps they were to blame in some way.'

Geggie, 89, a known moverand-shaker in Wakefield, led the 10 women in the letter-writing and fundraising campaign a decade ago. The group has grown to more than 30 women and has inspired hundreds of grandmother groups across Canada, including 36 in the Ottawa region.

The Wakefield Grannies alone have raised more than $150,000 towards their South African counterparts and mailed them supplies including warm winter clothes, school bags and cosmetics. They also launched a scholarship fund to help an Alexandra student attend university.

"Kids who had lost their parents and had no hope of a future are getting their degrees and graduating, and that is because their grandmothers were supported and could hold it together," said Brenda Rooney, a Wakefield granny and documentary filmmaker.

In 2006, prominent AIDS activist Stephen Lewis took interest in the Wakefield Grannies. He started the Grandmotherto-Grandmother Campaign, which has grown to 250 groups in Canada and the U.S.

The Wakefield Grannies will celebrate its 10th anniversary on Aug. 31 at the Fairbairn House in Wakefield. It runs from noon until 4 p.m. and the lineup features the Mighty Popo's Senegalese drummer Élage M'Baye. Tickets range from $5 for kids older than 12 years old to $25 for families.

The head of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police says the number of missing and murdered aboriginal women is "on the radar" of the country's law enforcement leaders.

Hundreds of the nation's top officers gathered Monday for their annual general meeting in Victoria, where Chu said the association's policing with aboriginal people committee had already met for a couple of days to discuss the issue.

Franklin expedition.

PM. during his tour of the North, gets a look at the tools being used to solve the mystery of doomed 1845 voyage

The final resting place of the lost ships of the Franklin expedition may remain a mystery for at least another summer.

A thick pack of sea ice is blocking a key part of the search area, making it inaccessible to ships.

The two ships of Sir John Franklin's doomed 1845 expedition - HMS Erebus and HMS Terror — are believed to be somewhere in the Victoria Strait off the west coast of King William Island, perhaps as far down as the Queen Maud Gulf off the Adelaide Peninsula.

Tranguilizer put to use to catch loose moose

A young moose stands behind a window in an administration building of Siemens in Dresden, Germany, on Monday. The moose evaded capture before getting stuck inside an office building, tantalizingly close to the canteen. A spokesman for the Dresden police said the young bull walked into the building housing German industrial giant Siemens shortly before lunch. Marko Laske said officers and wildlife officials spent six hours trying to shoo the moose into a container, but eventually had to resort to using a tranquilizer gun after he refused to follow orders. Post-secondary students grossly underestimate the cost of school, not to mention how much support they'll need from their parents, a new survey shows.

ARE THEY SINGLE? MAYBE, UM, ASK

If you're scrolling and swiping through an online dating site or app it's easy to assume that the men and women on screen are in fact available (or at least they're pretending to be) but what happens when you lock eyes with an attractive stranger in real life?

Married couples wear rings as a sign of commitment and to show the world that they're off the market, but there isn't really a universal indicator for available men and women to use to advertise that they're single and ready to mingle.

Back in 2013, Rina Mardahl and Rob Young launched MY Single Band in an attempt to create a wedding ring equivalent for singletons. The colourful silicone wristbands were designed to help men and women indi-

Perhaps MY Single Band didn't take off because the product looked so similar to the ubiquitous Livestrong bracelets and other charitable accessories. Or perhaps it was because most people don't want to appear desperate by wearing a brightly coloured rubber wristband that screams "I'm Single!"

Personally I've never been one for public declarations of romantic availability; I just can't imagine going through a painful real life breakup and then having to log in to my Facebook account to revise my relationship status for my entire extended social circle to see.

Ultimately the easiest way to determine if someone is available is to simply strike up a conversation. It's a daunting task to enquire after a stranger's romantic life, but you'll never know unless you try. And even if the object of your affection turns you down, getting rejected momentarily is certainly less embarrassing than wearing an obnoxious bracelet around 24-7 to broadcast your singledom.

Breaking Bad and Modern Family get Emmy's love

Emmy Awards.

Networks dominate top awards for shows and actors, as tribute to Williams and Weird Al parody draw raves

Modern Family won a record-tying fifth best comedy series Emmy Award and a dominant Breaking Bad captured the top drama award and a trio of acting honours in Monday's ceremony, which took a sombre turn as Robin Williams was remembered with restraint and grace by his longtime friend, Billy Crystal.

"He made us laugh. Hard. Every time you saw him," Crystal said of Williams at the conclusion of a tribute to industry members who died last year. "Robin Williams, what a concept."

Bryan Cranston was honoured as best actor in a drama for Breaking Bad, proving that True Detective nominee Matthew Mc-Conaughey's movie-star appeal couldn't conquer all.

"I have gratitude for everything that has happened," Cranston said. His victory ties him with four-time best drama actor champ Dennis Franz. Cranston's co-stars Aaron Paula and Anna Gunn were honoured in categories for best drama supporting acting,

"Thank you for this wonderful farewell to our show," creator Vince Gilligan said of the series about a teacherturned-drug kingpin that ended with a bang. The Good Wife star

The Good Wife star Julianna Margulies won the Emmy for best lead actress in a drama series. "What a wonderful time for women on television," Margulies said.

McConaughey was the object of too-handsome jokes by presenter Jimmy Kimmel and adoration by winner Gail Mancuso, honoured as best director for an episode of Modern Family.

"If you don't mind, Matthew McConaughey, I'm gonna make eye contact with you right now," she said from the stage, making good by holding the actor's gaze for much of her speech.

The ceremony honouring

the best of TV wasn't shy about playing the moviestar card. "Six minutes to Woody Harrelson" flashed on screen during Colin Bucksey's acceptance speech for best miniseries direction for Fargo.

Harrelson and his True Detective co-star were given time to banter before announcing that Benedict Cumberbatch of Sherlock: His Last Vow was the winner of the best miniseries actor

"So you won Oscar, (People magazine's) Sexiest Man Alive and now you want an Emmy, too. Isn't that a little bit greedy?" Harrelson teased his fellow nominee.

Fargo was named best miniseries, and the award for best miniseries actress went to Jessica Lange of American Horror Story: Coven.

Buffering the miniseries awards was a parody routine about top nominees by Weird Al Yankovic. Musical numbers usually look out of place at the Emmys, and this one was no different. Other scripted banter fell flat, although host Seth Meyers kept soldiering on.

CBS' The Big Bang Theory star Jim Parsons was crowned as best comedy series actor, giving him his fourth Emmy and putting him in league with all-time sitcom winners Kelsey Grammer and Michael J. Fox.

ABC's Modern Family, which tied Frasier as the alltime sitcom champ with five statuettes, also captured a best comedy supporting actor trophy for Ty Burrell.

Allison Janney was honoured as best supporting comedy actress for CBS' Mom, adding to the trophy she'd already picked up as guest actress on Masters of Julia Louis-Dreyfus, who received her third consecutive best comedy actress Emmy for the political comedy Veep, drew big laughs as she stopped to exchange faux heated kisses with Cranston, who earlier was her co-presenter and who appeared with her on Seinfeld.

Lohan's party spree goes to hell in an unfilmed bucket challenge

Recent reports suggested that Lindsay Lohan had been reaching out to her sober friends, but maybe it was just to taunt them. The on-again, off-again party girl has been on a spree, apparently, hitting four nightclubs in two different countries in one week, according to Radar Online. Lohan started her week enjoying herself at London's swanky Chiltern Firehouse until 3 a.m. and was all smiles when she snuck out the kitchen door.

But then she headed to New York, where her revelry didn't go as well. On the first night, she hit up club Up & Down, where she reportedly tried to do an ALS Ice Bucket Challenge video - except no one was filming it. Then at two separate nightclubs, Lohan pitched a fit when she couldn't get the table she wanted, according to sources. Looks like she was onto something with her whole "I want to move to England permanently" thing.

Chris's split with old gang ends with a bang bang

So what was behind the nightclub shooting this weekend that put a damper on some pre-VMAs festivities? As one source who's a big fan of understatement puts it, things went south "when a group of men tried to murder Chris Brown." Hate when that happens. According to MediaTakeOut.com, the impetus for the shooting was Brown's recent attempts to change his social scene postrehab. "Chris used to run with a bunch of gang bangers who were really scary. When he got out (of rehab), he cut them all off," a source tells the website. "I guess they're upset about that."

Some things never change, like Britney Spears' ridiculous fashion sense. What seemed like a terrible idea 13 years ago — matching alldenim ensembles — is still a terrible idea, as Katy Perry proved at the VMAs, teaming up with rapper Riff Raff to don a dress and suit made from poor, mistreated blue jeans in homage to Spears and then-boyfriend Justin Timberlake's infamous red carpet look from the VMAs in 2001. So what did Spears think of the tribute? You might be shocked to learn that she's totally into it. "Just when I thought the denim dress had retired....you bring it back! You looked amazing," Spears tweeted at Perry.

Lena helps gal-pal Taylor get Swift about what it means to be a feminist

It's a regular old gal-pal lovefest between Taylor Swift and Girls creator Lena Dunham, who just can't say enough nice things about each other. Swift insists that her evolving views on feminism are all thanks to her friendship with Dunham. "As a teenager, I didn't understand that saying you're a feminist is just saying that you hope women and men will have equal rights and equal opportunities. What it seemed to me, the way it was phrased in culture, society, was that you hate men," Swift tells the Guardian. "Becoming friends with Lena — without her preaching to me, but just seeing why she believes what she believes, why she says what she says, why she stands for what she says, why she stands for what she says, why she stands for what she stands for — has made me realize that I've been taking a feminist stance without actually saying so."

The roots of bad hair days

Emotional well-being.

Are we being shallow when our mane affects our mood, or is the feeling more complex?

IZABELA SZYDLO

life@metronews.o

You can curl it or straighten it, gel it or leave it loose, cut it short or let it grow — all depending on your mood.

Hair is a huge part of our identity, so it is no surprise that a bad hair day can leave us feeling pretty low

"Understand that this isn't superficial," says Dr. Vivian Diller, a clinical psychologist in New York. "I always remind people that we are raised to associate a head of hair with health, and lack of hair with illness. So, bad hair days actually do make us feel bad."

"Bad" may be an understatement. A Yale University study of men and women ages 17 to 30 concluded that even the thought of a bad hair day made both genders believe they weren't as smart as others.

Socially, men said they felt more nervous and less self-confident, while women reported feeling embarrassed, ashamed and self-conscious when experiencing bad hair days.

Diller attributes these differences to gender identity.

"The commonality of hav-

"The commonality of having a bad hair day is people feel out of control," she says.

"Men have a bit more comfort with bad hair days because their identity is more rooted in power. Women's identity, while they have worked very hard to combat it, still goes back to their appearance. That's probably hard-wired because of the role that we played in the survival of the species. Women's role was to attract a mate and procreate. Men's role was to take care of everybody."

And while Diller says the old adage "what's on the inside counts" is true, so is another saying: "When you look good you feel good, but when you feel good you also look better," she says. "There is definitely a feedback loop."

Does that mean we have become a more narcissistic society? Diller doesn't think so. Instead, she says what has changed is our accessibility to images of "perfection," which plays into our mental crises when our hair refuses to be tamed.

"Hair has always been important," she says, referencing historical figures like Cleopatra with her jet-black tresses and Samson, whose strength was dependant on his locks.

"But the fact that we have social media and imagery that can be altered by the everyday person has put a kind of pressure on looking perfect. If a bad hair day feels like it is going to ruin your whole day or self-esteem, then you are falling victim to this idea that to feel good, we have to be flawless."

Tara Gosling, Toronto-based stylist at Small Talk Barber Shop and Salon, and Jezreel Batson, a barber who owns JB Barber Design in Scarborough, Ont. regularly deal with clients singing the hair day blues.

Gosling says it's vital to remember that a bad hair day is exactly that. "You have to remind yourself that what you're feeling is in your head, and it's temporary," she says. "All it takes is one person to change it with a compliment because what you feel doesn't always reflect what you look like."

Batson, meanwhile, recommends recognizing that while hair is an important part of

Tame your mane

Gosling and Batson share their tips to minimize bad hair days.

- The cut. "Your hair will change day to day, depending on heat, humidity and the type of shampoo and products you use. But having a haircut that actually suits your lifestyle is key," says Gosling."
- Consistency. "Find some sense of consistency with what you feel comfortable with in terms of your style," says Batson. "Every once in a while it's good to be edgy or trendy, but ... usually bad hair days have to do with something that's gone astray from the norm."
- Focus on other features. "Putting your hair up shows more of your face, so you can highlight that," says Gosling.
- Products. "Products are important because they play a role in terms of hair health," explains Batson. "It's important that you know what ingredients you're putting in."

who you are, it isn't your entire identity. "Having the ability to utilize hair as a component of self-expression adds to a person's holistic well-being," says Batson. "However, being in an industry of trends, I know expression is based on what someone is feeling at the moment, not who the person truly is. Because it can be so easily altered, expression through hair is fleeting — just like a bad hair dav."

Vegan is not synonymous with bland or borina

Talk to Michael Abramson, owner and operator of Yamchops, Toronto's first vegan butcher shop, and he will tell you that he doesn't feel like a weirdo anymore.

While only "six per cent of Canadians call vegetarianism their way of life, 35 per cent of us incorporate meatless meals three days per week or more," he says.

It is a growth market with famous vegans like Bill Clinton, Ellen Degeneres, Paul McCartney and Gwyneth Paltrow lending their voices to the movement.

Needless to say, moving in the direction of plantbased eating is well known, well supported and now, well, delicious. Abramson's tips

- Focus on flavour and intensity; bland is brutal in any cuisine.
- Look for the fourth generation of soy: HME (High Moisture Extrusion), which is a soy and pea protein product ready to address
- Think about cold-press juicing. Cold pressing preserves all of the enzymes and nutrient as no heat, pasteurization or friction interferes with the living

If you are new to plantbased dining, Abramson suggests that you experiment and explore.

Check out ethnic markets for new greens and beans and seek inspiration at places like Yamchops and liven up your regular meals with it.

It is also a great way to start working more plant based food into your day.

canned. If using dry, drain and cook in lightly boiling water until tender.

2. Mash chickpeas with a potato masher to break them up to "tuna" size pieces.

Add onion, celery, pickles and capers and mix well. Add nori, salt and pepper, vegannaise and mix.

4. Store in fridge up to 3 days. Use as sandwich filling or salad toppings.

School can help you reach your second career

Is it possible to switch careers from performing audits and preparing financial statements to de-boning a chicken, creating the perfect meringue, and chopping vegetables into uniform-sized pieces?

That's the plan, says Celia Clutton, 28, of Mississauga, Ont., who enrolled in Le Cordon Bleu Culinary Arts Institute in Ottawa last June.

Clutton's post secondary education started at York University in Toronto several years ago. She studied accounting and then earned her chartered accountant designation from the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. But after working for a few years, Clutton realized it wasn't what she wanted to do long-term.

Now she's working towards Grand Diplôme® at Le Cordon Bleu Ottawa — and setting her sights on a career in the food business. Her goal is to work for a catering company or large hotel and eventually start her own catering company — where she will combine her cooking and finance skills.

LE CORDON BLEU: AT YOUR SERVICE

Le Cordon Bleu is a famous culinary arts school that was founded in Paris in 1895. Today, it is an international network of culinary arts and hospitality institutes. At the Ottawa campus, students may obtain the internationally recognized Grand Diplôme® in less than a year. For more information, visit lcbottawa.com.

"I love French cuisine, and I thought it would be the best foundation for me in terms of starting a career."

One of the reasons Clutton enjoys the classes is they're small, and there's a lot of one-on-one time with the chef instructors.

"I had some 're-learning' to do ... I learned how to cut an onion properly and how to dice faster.

"In the pastry class, they teach you how to make everything from pies to cakes without relying on thermometers or mixers. Everything's by hand in the first level, and I think that's the best way to go."

Clutton's love of food and cooking came early. At age nine she watched the Food Network after school, often asking her mom to pick up groceries on her way home from work and then cooking the family a meal.

"I believe if you do something you're passionate about it's never going to be a job. You'll always wake up wanting to go to work and looking forward to the next day, and that's how I feel."

Teenage stars take over women's golf

Early bloom. Why girls as young as 15 turn into golf superstars and boys not so much

For every Tiger Woods, there's a Michelle Wie, a Lexi Thompson and a Lydia Ko. Much-hyped teenage stars are all over women's golf.

Thompson won a major championship at the age of 19, and Ko was 15 and 16 when she won the Canadian Pacific Women's Open in 2012 and 2013. Canada has a phenom of its own in Brooke Henderson, the 16-year-old from Smiths Falls, Ont., who recently finished second at the U.S. Amateur Championship

teur Championship.
Explaining why women find the spotlight in golf so much younger than men has a lot do with body mechanics and a little to do with advances in teaching and technology that have been refined over time.

"The simple fact is that girls develop earlier than boys," Golf Canada's women's amateur coach Tristan Mullally said. "They reach their peak height faster, they develop in terms of their end body type faster.

"By the time they're 15, 16, 17, they're not going to change as much as a boy will."

Mullally added that a lot of teenage boys can't keep up with full-grown men on the PGA Tour because it's hard to drive the ball 300-plus yards consistently. Canadians Mike Weir, Graham DeLaet and David Hearn are in the majority of men who have taken longer to find their games.

Weir won the 2003 Masters at 32, while the 32-year-old DeLaet is only now enjoying his prime. Hearn took until just before his 34th birthday before he made the cut at a major tournament.

But the physics of women developing earlier than men is no new phenomenon. What's different is how girls with any golfing potential get extra attention to help refine those skills.

"They're more prepared to play professional golf than I was when I came out," said 36-year-old Cristie Kerr, who has two majors among her 16 career LPGA Tour victories.

"I just had my dad. They have their swing coaches, their mental coaches, their trainers, everything. They have sponsorships when they come out and we didn't. It's a lot different world for them." THE CANADIAN PRESS
